All The Ends Of The Earth, is bursting with energy—all focused on wonder at the deeds of the Lord. It is exuberant rather than triumphant, majestic rather than cute. Motion in this piece comes from the accompaniment’s rhythms and syncopation rather than from quickening the tempo. The eighth-note movement has been added to keep motion alive with the tempo and keep it from speeding up. The refrain is meant to be sung by the assembly. It will probably require a little work on the syncopation in “...to the wonders of the Lord.” The verses (especially verse one) require a strong soloist; the third verse works well if done by a soloist for the first half, who is then joined by the choir or even the assembly for the last half, “Let the ends of the earth...” In the assembly’s refrain, the high points are the words “eyes” and “come with justice” on in each half of the melody. The second half of verse three, especially at “... make music before our King,” is the major climax. The final refrain is the strongest. All The Ends Of The Earth works best as a final song.
