Composer Notes

This is the psalm for Passion Sunday, the beginning of the liturgical cycle. I've used this piece for the past ten years in two different parishes and it has also been making the rounds locally. The recording from my album Journey to You has a full arrangement with harp and timpani, while this printed version is a bit simpler. The printed octavo does have an added verse 4 and a soprano descant for the refrain that was not on the original recording. The choral arrangement also varies a little from the recording.

The verses should be sung in an almost recitative style, using a lot of rubato; another possibility is to play the accompaniment only on the downbeat. For the final refrain, start out at forte and then pull back to piano for the last repeated refrain. You might also have the choir sing a cappella on the repeat or use accompaniment only on the downbeats, and then have full accompaniment join back in, still at a lower dynamic level, for the final instrumental measures.

As we sing this psalm for Passion Sunday, may we truly enter into what it means to be united with Christ in his death and suffering and also united with him in praise of our God who is faithful to us all. May we surrender ourselves to hear the cross and the glory.
