Performance Notes

The simplicity of this ostinato song underlies the complexity in which it can be arranged, depending on the occasion. For example, for Pentecost the brass chorale arrangement might be a stirring way to add solemnity to the feast by using it as an introduction. For Confirmation, a more rock-oriented ensemble arrangement (with percussion) would appeal to the teens being confirmed. For prayer meetings, a simple guitar would suffice. The important thing to remember is not to play all instrumental parts all the time for every verse. Judicious arranging will add depth and dynamics to the singing of "Holy Spirit."

Always begin by letting the assembly sing through the refrain a few times before having the cantor or choir sing the verses on top. The tempo should be moderato, not rushed. Layer additional instrumental parts as the song progresses to a crescendo. End the song by slowly cutting out the instruments until all that's left is a cappella vocals, with the refrain sung continuously and quietly until the end.
