Performance Notes

Lift Up Your Hearts is a strong, joyful song especially appropriate for accompanying the Entrance, Communion, or Final processions. Therefore, a steady, solid rhythm and careful attention to syncopation will allow the assembly to enter into the movement of the piece. Instrumentalists (especially guitarists, pianists, bass, and (!) percussion) will have to set and keep a tempo that allows the words to ring out clearly. Too fast a pace loosens the bond between lyrics and rhythm, thus weakening the song; too slow makes it less than exciting. The original metronome marking of quarter note = 80 now seems a bit too slow; consider a pace at about 92.

Encourage the choir and/or soloists to proclaim the Verses clearly and with gusto. Note that the second half of the Verse is stronger than the first half, especially in the fourth Verse. The beginning of this Verse quietly tells a secret (“Listen now...”), one that cannot be held in, so it crescendos on the word “works,” and explodes into “Blessed be the Lord of my life...” Hold off the descant until just before the last Verse.

I am grateful to Oregon Catholic Press for issuing this new edition of Lift Up Your Hearts and for supporting my efforts to make its lyrics more inclusive. I wrote this piece at a time (1978) when the realization had dawned on many folks that references to humanity as “man” didn’t work anymore. That was before, however, the same sense about “God-talk” had come to the fore, and so Lift Up Your Hearts contained many references to God as “he” or “his.” That was then; this is now.

Behold The Glory Of God (from my collection of the same name, music for the Easter Vigil) was my first attempt to deal with the inclusive language issue for this song. I completely rewrote the lyrics because I did not believe it was possible to simply change the few difficult words and still have a unified song. However, I was recently heartened by several bold and insightful attempts of friends who did not want to see this text put to rest and who took up the challenge to make these lyrics more accessible to the prayer of a greater number of people. I would like to thank especially Laura Jefferson, Kate Boland, and Greg O’Meara for their aid. I believe that the new words focus the text of the psalm better and still preserve the integrity of the piece. Therefore, please use this new set of words and let the first text go. It served well for its time.

Why these changes? I worked with several principles to change this text: 1) In the music and rhythm of English, nouns and pronouns are not interchangeable—we speak nouns on downbeats and pronouns on upbeats. Therefore, “his” cannot really be replaced by “God’s.” 2) As a result of this first principle, one must look to changing a text in this order of importance—word, phrase, verse. Sometimes we can make a one-for-one shift (“whose” for “his”); sometimes not. Sometimes, as in the case of Verse 3, the whole of the lyric needs to be rewritten in order to maintain the integrity of its direction. 3) Where possible, make word changes based on the older vowel pattern. When we sing, it is the vowel sounds that we prolong. The ear recognizes and identifies those sounds. So when someone attempts to change the text of a piece, it is more helpful to approximate the original pattern of vowel sounds so that the new lyrics strike the ear as familiar. With these several principles in mind, composers and editors can work with those many texts which need a more inclusive reference to God, to make them more available for the prayer of the community.

One last comment. At this point in time I have chosen to keep the word “Lord” as a reference to God for two reasons. First, I believe we need to have that “long-o” sound available to us to contrast the “flat-o” sound of the word “God.” Second, the Oxford English Dictionary does give an old English meaning of the word as “the giver of bread,” therefore, it can be either male or female.
